October. Hark! bark! I hear the reapers in a row, Shouting their harvest carels blithe and loud, Cutting the rustled make whose crests are bowed.

With ears o'ertasseled, soon to be laid low; Crooked eart ward now, the orchards droop their boughs

With red-check fruits, while far along the wall, Full in the south-ripe plums and peaches fall in tuffed grass where languing lads carense;
And down the pasteres, where the horse goes round

His ring of tan beneath the mossey shed,
Old eider-presses work with creaky din,
Oozing in vats, and apples heap the ground;
And, hour by hour, a basket on his head.
Up-clambering to the spour, the ploughman pours them in!

Exc Isior. Put out thy talents to their use ... Lay nothing by to rust; Give yulgar ignorance thy scorn, And innocence thy trust And unfocence thy trust.

THE MINISTER OF MONT-CLAIR.

It was no use; the letters danced before his eyes, the whole world seemed wavering and uncertain in those days. He laid his book down and began to think of the great trouble which was shutting him in. When the black specks first began to dance between him and his paper, months ago, he had not thought of the matter. It was very annoying, to be sure, but he must have taxed his eyes too severely. He would work a little less by lamp-light—spare them awhile—and he should be all right. So he had spared them more and more, and yet the black specks kept up their elfin dance; and now for weeks the conviction had been growing on him slowly that he was going to be blind. He had not told his wife yet how could be bear to lay on her shoulders the burden of his awful calamity?

Oh, it was too hard. And yet, was it too hard? Dared be say so—he, God's minister—who had told other sufferers so many times that their chastenings were dealt out to them by a Father's hand, and that they should count all that brought them nearer to Him as joyous and not griev-

Yet speaking after the manner of this world, his burden seemed greater than he could bear. What could he do, a HADDOCK blind, helpless man? He must give up his work in life, let another take his ministry, sit helpless in the darkness, Heaven only knew for how long. Could he be resigned? Then, suddenly, a flash of hope kindled his sky. There might be help for him. This gathering darkness might be something which science could remove. He would be sure of that at least before he told Mary. And then he became feverishly impatient. He must know at once; it seemed to him he could not wait. He called his wife and told her, with a manner which he tried hard to make caim, that he was going out of town the next morning on a little business. She wondered that he was so uncommunicative-it was not like him, but she would not trouble him with any questions. She should under-stand it all some time, she knew, still she thought there was something strange in his way of speaking.

The minister strove hard for the mastery of his own spirit as the cars whirled him along next morning towards the tribunal at which he was to receive his sentence. He tried to think of something else, but found the effort vain ; so he said, over and over, as simply as a "Father, whichever way it turns, O, give me strength to bear it." Holding fast to this prayer, as to an anchor, he got out of the cars and went into the streets. What a curious mist seemed to surround all things! nouses looked high and spectral through it, the people he met seemed like ghosts. He had not realized his defective vision so much at home, where it came on him gradually—and all objects were so famil-iar. Still, with an effort, he could read the signs on the street corners, and find child, one form of words:

his way. He reached at last, the residence of the distinguished oculist for whose verdict he had come. He found the parlor half-filled with people, waiting like himself. He was asked for his name, and sent in a card on which was writ-ten, "Rev. Wm. Spencer, Montclair." Then he waited for his turn. He dared not think how long the time was, or what suspense he was in. He just kept his simple child's | rayer in his heart, and steadied himself with it. The time came for him at last, and he followed the boy who summoned him into a little room shaded with green, with green furniture, and on the table a vase of flowers. The stillness and the cool, scented air refreshed him. He saw dimly, as he WANTED a good canvasser to canvass for Beds. Apply in persen to C. E. Evans, Tremont House. BRIERLY, EVANS & CO. saw everything that morning-a tali, stight man, with kind face and quiet manners, who addressed him by name, invited him to sit down, and then inquired into his symptoms with such tact and sympathy that he felt as if he were talking to a friend. At last the doctor asked him to take a seat by the window, and have his eyes examined. His heart beat chokingly, and he whispered under his breath—

"Thy will, O God, be done; only give me strength."

Dr. Gordon was silent for a moment or two-it seemed ages to Mr. Spencer. Then he said w.th the tenderest, saddest voice, as if he felt to the uttermost all the pain he was inflicting,—
"I cannot give you any hope The malady is incurable. You will not loose
